

About:

The research team is responsible for researching rules and regulations about Tiny House building, both for Tiny Houses on wheels and on foundations. The group is also responsible for conducting research on innovative ways individuals / groups / organizations in different countries are using to deal with high real estate prices and unaffordable rent prices for housing and studio spaces, and to build a network of relationships with such individuals / groups / organizations.

Types of activities for research team members:

- Researching and compiling a guide for titling and registration of the Tiny House with the NY DMV
- Researching and compiling a guide for insuring the Tiny House on wheels: understanding the process to obtain insurance, research prices.
- Research individuals, groups, and organizations that are involved with innovative ways to deal with high real estate prices and unaffordable rent prices for housing and studio spaces.
  - Reach out to these individual / groups / organizations to interview them on their work and introduce the work of Women Who Build
  - Produce a directory of innovative housing / studio solutions around the world

FAQs*Do I have experience in research to be on this team?

No. Doing good research in this context means being able to answer to a question in a complete, exhaustive way, and providing backing material. Anyone can join.

If I don't have research experience will I receive guidance in performing the tasks that I am responsible for?

Yes. You will be given material explaining the task at hand and how to successfully perform it, and you can reach out any time if you have any question or would like any feedback.

How much extra time will I need to dedicate to this?

It depends on the project you choose and your previous research experience. We can work together to figure out tasks that you are interested in pursuing and that are suitable to your time commitment.
